

TOURISTS IN ORBIT

Ex-astronaut Buzz Aldrin is offering tourists day trips into space. A ticket -return, of course- will cost about $ 62,000 (€ 60,000).

Aldrin, the second man to walk on the Moon after Neil Armstrong, believes that the time has come when ordinary tourists can enjoy experiences which, until now, have been limited to professional astronauts.

Aldrin is one of six astronauts who have created a company called Space Adventures Travel, based in Houston, Texas (home of NASA).

LOTTERY PRIZE

The first place on the maiden flight was won by Raimund Czihak, a 32-year-old from Austria, in a competition organized by a supermarket chain. The project has been partially financed by lotteries, and lottery winners have won reservations on future flights.

Although they will only be passengers, the space tourists will have to take a five-day training course.

During the course, they will each be accompanied by a NASA astronaut. Training will include a high-altitude trip in a jet aeroplane to experience weightlessness. If they pass this test (weightlessness makes some people ill), the tourists will then be taught the emergency procedures that all astronauts have to learn.

Buzz Aldrin believes that space tourism will expand quickly. One day there will be hotels in space, he says, which will be built around the big empty fuel tanks which take shuttles into orbit. He thinks that in a few years, groups of 100 people at a time will be taking their vacation in space.
